

HAS YOUR AUNTIE GOT THE T-SHIRT?

Irish Global Solidarity in 100 Objects

What does history have to say about the present? What can we learn from how we engaged with global justice and human rights issues in the past to strengthen our activism and impact TODAY? Do you remember:

- ... striking against Apartheid in South Africa?
- ...drafting a joint letter from students to supermarkets in support of coffee producers in Central America?
- ...forming a local group to discuss climate justice and what county councils can do?

developmenteducation.ie and the Irish Development Education Association present Irish Global Solidarity in 100 Objects - a history of Irish education and action on international issues and campaigns.

Showcasing the heritage of global citizenship in Ireland, it uncovers the many contributions, stories and campaigns, expressed through artefacts and visual arts that bring these histories to life.

Gathered through an open call, the objects provide snapshots of Irish engagement with global cultural, political and social issues over the past 5 decades. They highlight the range of action taken by people and organisations in Ireland to tackle global justice issues, making this a unique opportunity to explore and learn from the past.

Irish Global Solidarity in 100 Objects will include an exhibition in January 2020, a programme of workshops and public events and a digital storytelling portal.
